The two strangers walked out of the desert the same day the Carnival came to town; I don't know what caused more chat in the saloon that night. The arrival of the Carnival had been anticipated for weeks, a welcome distraction from the heat and the flies of the hottest summer anyone could remember. But two men walking out of the desert? That was a thing of wonderment. And that was just the start of the battle, the battle for our souls. The battle for the future. A short story.
