Cynthia Breault needs a new life. She's not miserable. She's bored. Bored with her safe monotonous job; bored with her cautious loneliness. Thanks to an unexpected financial windfall, Cynthia opts for early retirement at fifty, hoping to find a new passion. Soon, she thinks she's found it – in the form of a failing boutique abandoned by its mysterious owner. And the shop is not the only thing the proprietor has deserted.

There's a very nice husband left behind as well. It's perfect. Until Cynthia meets Shannon Miller.

Shannon is fourteen, a tough and defiant casualty of the foster care system. And she's pregnant. Irresistibly drawn to this foul-mouthed, sarcastic, but vulnerable teenager, Cynthia rediscovers long-buried memories. Suddenly the store seems unimportant. And hoping she can explain to the new man in her life – eventually, anyway – Cynthia takes the leap. She offers Shannon a deal. With strings attached.

If they both get what they want, does it matter that their scheme is just slightly illegal?
